LEAD helps mend important relationships and strengthen clients’ support networks

A client was struggling to stay on track with treatment after being cast out by his family when he came out as gay, causing a relational divide with his mother.

A case manager used the Restorative Justice Model to help the client’s mother understand the client’s sexual identity while maintaining her religious beliefs.

After the intervention, client’s mom was able to say she loved him, strengthening the client’s sense of support and motivating him to continue improving his life.
LEAD tailors solutions to clients’ individual identities and circumstances

A Native client decided to re-commit herself to recovery. LEAD helped her get into a residential substance use program designed specifically for indigenous people.

Client is excited to engage in native spiritual practices as an important part of her recovery.

This program will also situate her to reconnect with her child, who lives close to the residence.
LEAD helps people achieve stability through housing

GLIDE collaborated with another community agency to get a mentally-ill client assessed for permanent housing.

If the client is accepted, he’ll be housed after 15 years of homelessness.
LEAD assists in harm reduction through access to drug treatment

A client has come a long way through her own doing, assisted by the love and support from her case manager.

She is now on Suboxone and is going to start college this fall.

A client was arrested and booked into custody.

Her case manager was made aware of the client’s concerns about her mental health and medication because she was experiencing withdrawal.

The case manager connected the client with her doctor and got her on Suboxone while she was in custody.
Interim Analyses

Service Dates: Nov 2, 2017 – June 30, 2019

• Referral, Enrollment & Service Updates
• Preliminary Recidivism Data
By Q8 (end of pilot), the initial target has been surpassed by 132 referrals.
Social contact referrals have been made at 5 times the rate expected.
Pre-booking referrals have been lower than expected.

Source: LEAD SF Referral Logs, Nov 2017 – June 2019
By Q8 (end of pilot), more than double the expected enrollments have been made.
Social contact referrals consistently make up the majority of enrollments in each quarter.

By the end of the initial pilot period, 70% of enrollments were social contact referrals.
Average Service Hours per LEAD Client

Average of 33.5 total hours spent per enrolled client on assessment, legal services, and case management and outreach services.
Time spent with LEAD clients is divided equally between case management/outreach services and legal services.

There are no large differences in jail bookings for all three time periods.
