6. SF WIC children and Infants: with Impact of food insecurity and other public health outcomes	Priti Rane presented Retention of Infants and Children on SF WIC : Impact on Food Insecurity and Other Public Health Outcomes In recent years San Francisco’s WIC program has experienced a significant decline in the participation rates, particularly of children over one year of age similar to the state and nationwide declining trend in participation.

Approved

- WIC's impact on children's health Reduced fetal deaths and infant mortality.
- Improved growth of nutritionally at-risk infants and children.
- Decreased incidence of iron deficiency anemia in children and overall improved diets.
- Children enrolled in WIC are more likely to have a regular source of medical care and have more up to date immunizations.
- Children who receive WIC benefits demonstrate improved intellectual development and school readiness
- WIC reduces the prevalence of child food insecurity by at least 20% *
- Children who are food insecure are sick more often, and more likely to have to be hospitalized and suffer growth impairment that precludes their reaching their full physical and cognitive potential.

Ms. Rane stated trends from 2011 to 2017 show

29% decline in infant participation

34% drop in child participation

39% drop in prenatal participation and

72% of children drop out of the program prematurely

English speakers are more likely to drop out of the program than non-English speakers regardless of race or ethnicity

Ms. Rane hypothesized that hassles, stigma and expectations gaps are the main factors the drop in retention

WIC introduced several countermeasures to address retention that included but were not limited to, development of participant satisfaction surveys, refreshing the office space, introducing a communication strategy, as well as Modernization of WIC- New MIS and Electronic Benefit Transfer (EBT)

The counter measures have resulted in:

- Results from pre/post surveys indicate that food security rates among EatSF WIC participants increased 15% from 38% to 53%.
- Participant retention was 96% and participants redeemed 81% of distributed vouchers.
